HER LITTLE SCHEME

By CYRUS DERICKSON

Copyright, 1904, by C. B. Lewis

"See here, James," said the old real estate dealer after he had listened to what young James Brighton had to say, "we can run this thing up in a nutshell. You and my daughter Rose think you love each other, and you want to get married. Granted that it is a match made in heaven, you haven't a hundred dollars to your name. You are ambitious and willing, but that doesn't pay house rent nor buy mutual chops. I have no fault to find with you as a man, but until you have made headway in the world it will be useless to hope for my consent. Make a start—get $5,000 ahead—get prospects, and then come to me."

"But, sir," pleaded the young man as his face went white, "Rose and I are engaged."

"Then you are not as honorable a man as I thought you."

"But we love each other as no two people—"

"Bosh! If you love Rose as you say you do, get money to keep her from starving after you are married. As near as I can make out, you are depending upon me even to pay for the license. Love is all right in its way, and I would have my daughter marry no one who did not regard her as the only woman on earth, but love has got to be fed on beefsteak and potatoes to make it last. Married people have also got to have houses and furniture. Your income, James—may I ask what it is?"

"Twenty dollars a week, sir—but I have—"

"Expectations, of course. Well, expectations won't satisfy the coal man or the landlord."

James Brighton's face turned from a dead white to a vivid red. That he was a fine young man everybody admitted; that he was industrious and trustworthy his employers asserted; that he would some day have a reasonable share of wealth was almost to be calculated upon, but as a matter of fact he hadn't stopped to balance his love for Rose Henderson against so much for weekly expenses from week to week. It did look as if he was depending on the "old man," and as soon as he realized his natural independence of spirit forced him to say:

"YOU ARE DEPENDING UPON ME EVEN TO PAY FOR THE LICENSE."

"You are right, Mr. Henderson. While Rose and I are engaged to be married, I promise you that we will take no further steps in that direction until I have accumulated at least $5,000. Thank you for your kind words, sir, and good day to you."

"He either means it or he has a trick up his sleeve," mused the old man after his would-be son-in-law had departed. "At any rate, I'll keep an eye on him."

James Brighton had been doubtful of the result, but Rose not at all. She believed her sweetheart had only to ask for her hand to receive it with the father's blessing. For a few minutes after hearing the answer he was stunned. "Then she quietly asked:

"Do you mean that we shall wait until you have somehow managed to save $5,000?"

"I told your father so."

"And how long will that take?"

"Well, I'm saving at the rate of $7 per week at present. Next year I hope to make it $10."

"And it will take you perhaps ten years?"

"Call it seven or eight."

They looked into each other's eyes for a long minute, and the girl hoped to hear him speak of an elopement or a secret marriage. Seven or eight years was an eternity. The young man was an ardent worker, but he was also a man of strong principles, and he did not utter the words she waited for. "And we will wait?" she finally whispered.

"I shall," he replied.

"And I?"

She didn't finish. He saw her eyes flash and her jaw set, and he wondered if she had a temper of her own after all. He had scarcely made his departure when she was walking her room with clenched hands. It was two hours before she "let down" to reason things out. She was still reasoning at midnight, and it was two hours later before her plans were all completed. At breakfast table there were no signs of anger or disappointment or a broken heart, and the father winked at his plate and whispered to himself:

"Rose's either the best of daughters and ought to have a diamond ring for this, or she has some little scheme to spring on me. Very innocent girl, Rose is, but she'll bear watching."

He should have watched her that very day instead of making a journey of twenty miles and back to see a certain piece of real estate. While he was tramping over the broad acres of a farm and inspecting buildings who was talking with a lawyer whose reputation was generally referred to as "shady" and hunting up a quiet boarding house in the suburbs. When the father reached home it was to find the house in charge of an old servant and to learn that the young mistress had been absent all day. This was some- thing so unusual that he was at once alarmed, and as night came he could hardly sit still. The night passed without a word from her, and he was making ready to call for the assistance of the police when a note from Rose was shoved under the front door by a boy who rang the bell and ran away. The note read that she had been kidnapped and was being held for $7,000 ransom. If the money was sent to a certain place she would be set at liberty at once. If not—well—

"I'll see 'em hanged first!" roared the father as he rose to the occasion. "She's been kidnapped by James Brighton, of course, but I'll have him behind the bars within an hour!"

The police found James Brighton easily enough, but he soon satisfied them that he had no hand in the affair. Naturally he was even more concerned than the father. He advised "no compromise, and for four days the police had charge of the case and worked every string they could grasp. Second and third notes were received from Rose. She was being well treated, but the money must be paid or the kidnappers would become desperadoes. Day and night the father and the lover hunted in company, but the bold fellows had covered their tracks too well. When the police acknowledged themselves beaten the ransom money was forwarded, and three hours later Rose was home. Never mind the tale she told. Suffice it to say that it was well told and hung together like a chain. It was two evenings later that she smilingly queried of James:

"Didn't you have an aunt die about a month ago?"

"Yes; a dear old soul."

"Didn't she leave you $5,000?"

"Bless me, but she hadn't $5,000 to—"

"Oh, but she had! If she didn't leave you $5,000 I don't know how else you could have got it. I believe there was some understanding with father, eh?"

"Yes, but—"

"Well, you've got $5,000, and—"

"And they had been married three months when the astute old Mr. Henderson stopped on the street one day to give his leg a mighty slap and exclaim: 'What an old fool I am! It was Rose who had a little scheme to work, and by the jumping Joe she worked it!'"

Hindoo as Fighters.

A native officer of India writes of the Sikh soldiers: "The Sikhs or reformed Hindoos have all the qualities of the best fighters, and the Indians as well as their fellow subjects in Europe have indeed reason to be proud of them. There are two other castes in the Punjab also noted for their fighting qualities, the Jats and the Dogras. Another great fighting race in the Punjab inhabiting the northwestern part are commonly known as the Pathans. They are now Mohammedans by faith. The Gurkhas of Nepal, the only independent state in India, though generally below average height, have proved themselves the most indomitable, brave and hardy hill fighters. European officers attached to Gurkha regiments love their men and are proud of them. Their free and easy manners, abstemious habits, cheerful disposition, bravery in the field of war or of sport help to raise them in the estimation of all who come in contact with them. They are of Hindoo origin."

"Relics" of Waterloo.

The last time Victor Hugo went to Waterloo he saw some Belgian bumpkins discharging old felloes at the walls of a freshly whitewashed farmhouse. "Perme du Cullon, if I re- member rightly. As he saw no target he asked why they did this. An elderly man of prosperous appearance, with a broad grin showing gaps in the teeth, said, 'It is for the tourists.'"

"How for the tourists?"

"You see, the premises began to look out of repair, and the house untidy. I was now making bullet marks to show the excursionists whom the old sergeants take round," and then, grinning more broadly: "You are a Frenchman and do not believe in relics. The English gape at them and buy them as fast as we can have them manufactured and write about them in notebooks."—London Truth.

His Unpleasant Past.

"He talks a great deal about his family tree."

"That may account for the tales I've heard about his shady past."—Philadelphia Press.

When the heart is won, the under- standing is easily convinced. —Simmons.

George Sand's Oddities.

George Sand, or Aurore Dupin, the famous French woman writer, scandalized her literary friends by wearing men's clothes. "A long gray overcoat," she herself says she wore, "a woolen tie and—and a pair of boots." These boots were her joy. "I longed to sleep with them. On their little iron shod heels I was firm on foot and trotted from house to house, and I was not a bit out of Paris to the other." She also smoked in public cigarettes, even cigars, so that her teeth were much discolored. It was this outward mannishness that won for her the title of "Illustrated Hybrid." However, her hands were beautifully feminine. "It was says one who knew her, 'a delicate hand, all grace, tact, firmness and flexibility. One could not dream of a more perfect combination of the French working class woman's and the aristocratic or royal lady's hand.' It will be recalled that George Sand boasted, 'The blood of kings is mixed in my veins with the blood of the poor and lowly slave, as was she termed it, "aristide" of the two classes, the peasant and the aristocrat.'

A Quaint Proclamation.

Somewhat over a hundred years ago George III. of England, with his court, went to Weymouth for his health. The mayor of Dorchester, a neighboring town, being much impressed by the expected arrival of the royal visitor, issued the following proclamation: "Whereas, his majesty the king and queen is expected to honor this ancient corporation with their presence in the course of their journey in order to prevent them from meeting so impediment in his journey the worshipful the mayor have thought proper that the following regulations shall be prohibited, as follows: Nobody must leave no dust, nor nothing in that shape, before their doors nor shops; and all wheelbarrows, carts and other minerals must be swept out of the streets. Any one who shall give offense in any of these articles shall be dealt with according to law, without bail or mainprize. God save his majesty the king and queen and his worship the mayor."

The Skull Shrinkers.

The Haumbies Indians, living in the northern part of Peru and near the southern boundary of Ecuador, follow one of the most remarkable vocations in the world. They are able, by a process known only to that tribe, to reduce the human head to one-third its original size and retain the features and coloring to a perfect degree.

The head is severed from the trunk, the skull and frontal bone are removed and in the cavity a soft mold of clay is fitted. It is then hung by the scalp from a tripod over hot coals, the water and steam for three days. After this the shrinking process begins, which requires skill and is a secret that the Indians guard jealously. These heads are sold to the tourists at $1.50 each, but as the tribe is savage and the complexity of civilization has not mastered them, it is difficult to obtain the heads at any price.

The Honeybee.

How much honey does a bee find in a flower? A naturalist says he has observed a bee extract a whole drop of honey from one flower, and again he has watched a bee visit a hundred flowers without getting load enough to return to the hive. Bees work advantageously within a radius of three miles of the hive, but they will go eight miles to get honey from a field of buckwheat. They are very partial to the buckwheat, and Bees have a most delicately developed scent. When a bee leaves its hive it rises in the air and scents the honey bearing flowers in the wind and follows the scent to the flowers.

Changes in National Features.

Whether we look at portrait galleries, like Hampton court, or turn over illustrations in old books, it is evident that some physiognomical change has been taking place. The stout, plethoric, muscular, ruddy faced man of olden times is being taken by a thinner, more alert, active type. The modern face is more keen, leaner and of less coarse mold than that of the older pioneers who laid the foundation of their country's greatness. "Aspects of Social Evolutions."

Ough.

A correspondent of an English paper points out nine ways of pronouncing the letters "ough." These are, written phonetically, as in conf, cauf (each is allowable), emuff, thuff, thoo, hie, mough, the Irish lough and the Scotch pronunciation of ough, "au." The two muncipal of ough, "au," the two muncipal of ough, "au," the two muncipal of ough, "au."
